

Are you professionally interested in...

- Why people don't listen to good financial advice?
- How they can reduce money conflict with family, friends, co-workers?
- How they can use money and property to build intimacy with loved ones?
- Why they get caught up in destructive behaviors like gambling, larceny, and over-spending?
- How they can cope emotionally as well as financially with crises like bankruptcy and foreclosure?
- What role money and property can play in finding true and lasting happiness?
- Other questions that involve the overlap of money and psychology?

Then join us:

The Association for Financial Psychology

A 501(c)(3) Minnesota Non-Profit Corporation

Our goal is to build a network of academics in many disciplines, practitioners in fields from financial services to personal and family counseling, students, and other people who are interested in why people do as they do with money and property.

Benefits

- Connect with people who have similar questions
- Ask serious questions on tough topics, hear thoughtful opinions
- Exchange knowledge and experience with practitioners and academics
- Find good literature,
- Discover research partners

Features

- No dues, fees, or other costs; No obligations
- A free list-serv for professionals, academics, and students
- Psychology-centered, but open to all disciplines and occupations
- For educational purposes only; No on-line counseling or therapy, no solicitation
- Just an easy way to network about Financial Psychology

Simply e-mail us and say you'd like to join the AFP: AFP@umn.edu

Professor Ken Doyle, Licensed Psychologist, University of Minnesota
323 Murphy Hall, 206 Church Street, Minneapolis MN 55455
www.KenDoyle.umn.edu

For more information, please visit: <http://www.associationforfinancialpsychology.org>

The AFP is an Equal Opportunity Professional Association